I. THE JOURNALIST’S PRIVILEGE IS A CORE FIRST AMENDMENT PROTECTION EXPLICITLY RECOGNIZED BY THE NINTH CIRCUIT AS APPLICABLE TO UNPUBLISHED MATERIALS AND TO CRIMINAL CASES. 4

 A. The Ninth Circuit Has Recognized the Existence of a Qualified First Amendment Journalist’s Privilege in Criminal and Civil Cases..... 5

 B. The Ninth Circuit has Recognized that this Qualified First Amendment Journalist’s Privilege Applies to Unpublished Material. 8

II. IN BALANCING THE GOVERNMENTAL AND FIRST AMENDMENT INTERESTS IN THIS CASE, THE COURT MUST GIVE WEIGHT TO the SERIOUS CLAIMS THAT HAVE BEEN RAISED ABOUT WHETHER THERE IS A LEGITIMATE FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT INTEREST IN MR. WOLF’S UNPUBLISHED VIDEOTAPE..... 9

 A. The Circumvention By Federal and Local Law Enforcement Authorities of the Absolute Protection Mr. Wolf Would Enjoy Under the California Constitution Is a Factor That Should Be Weighed in the Balance..... 9

 B. The Federal Enforcement Authorities’ Apparent Failure to Show that they Have Adhered to Department of Justice Guidelines in Issuing a Subpoena to Mr. Wolf Is Another Relevant Factor. 10

 C. Mr. Wolf’s Ability to Function as a Journalist Is Threatened by this Subpoena; Jailing Mr. Wolf Will Chill Others Engaged in Constitutionally Protected Activities. 11

INTEREST OF AMICUS¹

2 The American Civil Liberties Union of Northern California (“ACLU”) seeks leave to file 3 this amicus curiae brief because it believes that this case raises an issue that goes to the core of the 4 First Amendment’s protections for freedom of speech and of the press. The ACLU firmly 5 believes that a journalist’s qualified privilege to withhold confidential sources and unpublished 6 information is an extremely important aspect of this protection. A court faced with the assertion 7 of this privilege should engage in a careful balancing of the First Amendment and governmental 8 interests at stake before ruling on whether the government is justified in seeking the journalist’s 9 unpublished materials.

10 The prior opinion filed in this matter failed to engage in a full balancing of these interests.
11 Judge Maria Elena James held only that “the First Amendment does not shield a reporter or news 12 organization from responding to a subpoena in a criminal case, unless the reporter can show that 13 the grand jury investigation was conducted in bad faith.” In re Grand Jury Investigation, Joshua 14 Wolf, No. CR 06-90064 MISC MMC (N.D. Cal. April 5, 2006) (order denying Joshua Wolf’s 15 motion to quash subpoena). The government is taking a similar position before this Court in this 16 proceeding, arguing that the United States Supreme Court has already decided the fate of 17 journalists like Mr. Wolf. The ACLU believes that these are not full and accurate statements of 18 the extent of the First Amendment journalist’s privilege, and they ignore other important 19 considerations that this Court should consider. The ACLU argues in this brief that the First 20 Amendment journalist’s privilege is not irrelevant in a criminal investigation, and that this Court 21 has an obligation to carefully weigh the respective interests.

22 The ACLU has independent First Amendment concerns about the federal investigation at 23 the heart of this case. That this investigation was carried out by a Joint Terrorism Task Force 24 (“JTTF”), and was related to an anti-war demonstration and encompassed the activities of 25 anarchist groups, is consistent with a disturbing nationwide pattern of JTTF activities, where, 26 under the guise of fighting “terrorism,” political activists and anti-war demonstrators have been

27 _____
28 ¹ Attorneys for Amicus would like to acknowledge the assistance of Leo Goldbard, a third year student from Yale Law School, in the preparation of this brief.

1 targeted for investigation. The ACLU believes this factor is relevant to this Court's consideration 2 of whether there is a legitimate federal law enforcement interest here that outweighs the First 3 Amendment interests at stake.

4 A JTTF is an entity that encompasses representatives from federal, state, and local law 5 enforcement agencies, operating under the direction and out of the offices of the FBI. Such 6 coordination in investigating terrorism is laudable; however, a disturbing pattern has emerged that 7 strongly suggests that JTTFs have been used as a means of investigating protestors in general, and 8 anti-war protestors in particular, going far beyond their mandate to investigate potential terrorism.

9 In the past two years, documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by 10 ACLU offices nationally have revealed a pattern of the JTTF's investigation of political activity.
11 Records obtained by the ACLU in Pennsylvania, for example, document a JTTF investigation of 12 the Thomas Merton Center, an organization described by the FBI as "a left wing organization 13 advocating, among many political causes, pacifism." The documents discuss the Center's efforts 14 to promote better understanding between Muslims and non-Muslims and its coordination with 15 Muslim organizations. Similarly, a document entitled "International Terrorism Matters" lists 16 various anti-war protests in Pittsburgh and New York. See Jonathan S. Landay, "FBI targeted 17 Opponents of Iraq invasion," Contra Costa Times, March 15, 2006.

18 Documents obtained by the ACLU in Colorado describe JTTF investigations of political 19 activists, including Food not Bombs, an organization that distributes food to the homeless. The 20 documents also chronicle the license plate numbers of anti-war activists who had gathered at a 21 bookstore and what they were wearing. See Felisa Cardona, "FBI allegedly kept eye on 22 nonviolent anti-war groups," Denver Post, March 29, 2006.²

23
24
25 ² This pattern is reminiscent of the kind of abuses associated with the FBI's COINTELPRO 26 program in the 60's and 70's, as documented in the Church Committee Report: "The crescendo of 27 improper intelligence activity in the latter part of the 1960's and the early 1970's shows what we 28 must watch out for: In time of crisis, the Government will exercise its power to conduct intelligence activities to the fullest extent. The distinction between legal dissent and criminal conduct is easily forgotten." Final Report of the Select Committee Report to Study Governmental Operations, Senate Report No. 94-755, 94th Congress, 2d Session, April 26, 1976, p. 289.

1 Most recently, documents obtained by the ACLU of Northern California from the Defense
2 Department demonstrate that the JTTF was briefed and coordinated with Homeland Security 3 and/or Defense Department officials who gathered information on counter-recruitment protests at 4 UC Berkeley and Santa Cruz – protests that were later included in a Defense Department anti-5 terrorism database. See Demian Bulwa, “Terror database tracks UC Protests,” San Francisco
6 Chronicle, July 19, 2006.³

7 In this case, the Joint Terrorism Task Force was activated to assist local authorities in this 8 investigation only three days after the incident, and in a context where Mr. Wolf is raising credible 9 claims questioning the legitimacy of the federal law enforcement interest in this incident. It is 10 clear that JTTF “assistance” provides a means of seeking unpublished materials from a journalist 11 and questioning him about his associations with anarchist groups, in the face of a state 12 Constitution that would absolutely prohibit the state from obtaining Mr. Wolf’s “unpublished” 13 information.

14 The journalist is asserting that this compelled disclosure will interfere with his ability to 15 cover the activities of such groups, by making him part of the investigation effort. Mr. Wolf’s 16 interests here, and his legitimate concerns about his ability to continue to work as a journalist, are 17 the very reason the vast majority of states and federal Circuits have enacted or recognized a 18 journalist’s right to refuse to disclose unpublished information. The ACLU believes that critically 19 important First Amendment interests are at stake in this case, especially in the context of this 20 larger controversy surrounding JTTF overreaching with respect to First Amendment protest 21 activities.

22 STATEMENT OF FACTS

23 Joshua Wolf, an independent journalist, has been subpoenaed before a federal grand jury as 24 part of an investigation led by the San Francisco Police Department (SFPD) and Joint Terrorism

25 ³ In American Civil Liberties Union of Northern California, et al vs. U.S. Department of Defense, 26 et al. (C-06-01698 WHA), this Court granted plaintiffs’ motion for summary judgment and 27 ordered expedited processing of their FOIA request for information concerning government 28 information-gathering about the activities of anti-war protestors and organizations. While that case did not raise directly issues related to JTTFs, it did raise concerns about the federal government’s intelligence gathering activities of protest groups.

1 Task Force (JTTF) of the possible arson of an SFPD police vehicle at a protest march that took 2 place in San Francisco on July 8, 2005. The SFPD was investigating a physical assault on a police 3 officer at the same location and time. Three days after the incident, the SFPD requested federal 4 law enforcement assistance.

5 Immediately thereafter, several SFPD and FBI agents, acting in their roles as JTTF, came 6 to Mr. Wolf's home seeking unpublished video footage of the demonstration taken in the 7 proximity of these incidents. They also questioned him about his connections to anarchist groups.
8 Mr. Wolf has refused to turn over the unpublished material, which is now the subject of the federal 9 grand jury subpoena that is at issue in this case.

10 The grand jury seeks unedited footage taken by Mr. Wolf of the protest and his testimony 11 concerning the footage. The grand jury already possesses edited versions of the footage broadcast 12 to the public. Mr. Wolf has refused to release the unedited footage to the grand jury. Mr. Wolf 13 filed a motion to quash the subpoena, claiming among other defenses that he is privileged from 14 answering the subpoena as a newsperson under the First Amendment. Mr. Wolf's claims were 15 rejected on April 5, 2006 and June 15, 2006 and, since he continues to refuse to answer the 16 subpoena, he now faces charges of civil contempt. Mr. Wolf continues to assert as a defense to 17 the charges that he is privileged from answering the subpoena under the First Amendment.

18 ARGUMENT

19 I. THE JOURNALIST'S PRIVILEGE IS A CORE FIRST AMENDMENT 20 PROTECTION EXPLICITLY RECOGNIZED BY THE NINTH CIRCUIT AS 21 APPLICABLE TO UNPUBLISHED MATERIALS AND TO CRIMINAL CASES.

22 The importance of a free press to an informed public and a free society is a core purpose 23 and principle of the First Amendment. The courts have long recognized the connection between a 24 robust press and the informed citizenry necessary for our democracy, as well as the dangers of 25 governmental actions that by undermining the press thereby endanger the free and full flow of 26 information that is the main purpose of the First Amendment to maintain. E.g., Rosenbloom v.
27 Metromedia, Inc., 403 U.S. 29, 51 (1971) (quoting 6 Writings of James Madison, 1790-1802, at 28 336 (G. Hunt ed. 1906)); Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532, 539 (1965) (recognizing the role of the press as "a mighty catalyst in awakening public interest in governmental affairs, exposing

1 corruption among public officers and employees and generally informing the citizenry of public 2 events and occurrences”).

3 A. The Ninth Circuit Has Recognized the Existence of a Qualified First 4 Amendment Journalist’s Privilege in Criminal and Civil Cases.

5 One aspect of this constitutional protection is the qualified privilege of journalists to 6 withhold the names of sources and unpublished material. As recognized by the Ninth Circuit, the 7 journalist’s privilege is a “‘partial First Amendment shield’ that protects journalists against 8 compelled disclosure in all judicial proceedings, civil and criminal alike.” Shoen v. Shoen, 5 F.3d 9 1289, 1292 (9th Cir. 1993) (Shoen I) (emphasis added) (quoting Farr v. Pitchess, 522 F.2d 464, 10 467-68 (9th Cir. 1975)). This privilege is not absolute; rather, it requires a judicial balancing of 11 the interests in compelling disclosure against the First Amendment interests weighing against 12 disclosure.

13 In Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665 (1972), the United States Supreme Court had earlier 14 addressed the issue of the journalist’s privilege in the context of a federal grand jury subpoena.
15 Writing for a 5-4 majority, Justice White refused to recognize such a privilege in the cases before 16 the Court, while at the same time recognizing that the First Amendment interests at stake in such a 17 compelled disclosure required constitutional protection from government overreaching:

18 News gathering is not without its First Amendment protections, and 19 grand jury investigations if instituted or conducted other than in 20 good faith, would pose wholly different issues for resolution under 21 the First Amendment. Official harassment of the press undertaken 22 not for purposes of law enforcement but to disrupt a reporter’s 23 relationship with his news sources would have no justification.

24 Id. at 707-708.

25 Justice Powell, the deciding vote in the majority opinion, wrote a separate concurring 26 opinion explaining the “limited nature of the Court’s holding”:

27 If a newsman believes that the grand jury investigation is not being 28 conducted in good faith he is not without remedy. Indeed, if the newsman is called upon to give information bearing only a remote and tenuous relationship to the subject of the investigation, or if he has some other reason to believe that his testimony implicates confidential source relationships without a legitimate need of law enforcement, he will have access to the court on a motion to quash and an appropriate protective order may be entered. The asserted

1 claim to privilege should be judged on its facts by the striking of a 2 proper balance between freedom of the press and the obligation of 3 all citizens to give relevant testimony with respect to criminal 4 conduct. The balance of these vital constitutional and societal 5 interests on a case-by-case basis accords with the tried and 6 traditional way of adjudicating such questions.

7 Id. at 710 (Powell, J., concurring) (emphasis added).

8 In light of the recognition in the majority opinion that “newsgathering is not without its 9 First Amendment protection,” and of Justice Powell’s concurrence, a significant majority of the 10 Circuits that have addressed the issue post-Branzburg have recognized the continued existence of 11 a qualified newsperson’s privilege to refuse to disclose confidential sources or unpublished 12 information, and the obligation of the courts when compelling testimony from journalists to 13 balance the specific governmental and First Amendment interests involved. See, Bruno & 14 Stillman, Inc. v. Globe Newspaper Corp., 633 F.2d 583, 595-96 (1st Cir. 1980); United States v.
15 Burke, 700 F.2d 70, 77 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Cuthbertson, 630 F.2d 139, 147 (3d Cir.
16 1980); LaRouche v. National Broadcasting Co., 780 F.2d 1134, 1139 (4th Cir. 1986); Miller v.
17 Transamerican Press, 621 F.2d 721, 725 (5th Cir. 1980); Cervantes v. Time, Inc., 464 F.2d 986, 18 992-93 & n.9 (8th Cir. 1972); Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 563 F.2d 433, 436-37 (10th Cir.
19 1977); Zerilli v. Smith, 656 F.2d 705, 714 (D.C. Cir. 1981); see also 8 Robert D. Sack, Sack on 20 Defamation § 14.3.2, 14-13, 14-14 (3d ed. 2006).

21 The Ninth Circuit first addressed the Branzburg decision in a case involving a federal 22 grand jury subpoena. Burse v. United States, 466 F.2d 1059 (1972), overruled on other grounds, 23 In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 863 F.3d 667, 669-70 (9th Cir. 1988). In a decision that was issued 24 the day after Branzburg, the Burse Court held that the grand jury questions posed to reporters for 25 the Black Panther Party newspaper abridged constitutional protections for the press. In weighing 26 the respective interests, the Court stated that “[w]hen First Amendment interests are at stake, the 27 Government must use a scalpel, not an ax.” Id. at 1088. The Court rejected the government’s 28 argument that the fact that this investigation was a grand jury proceeding relieved the court of the 29 need for First Amendment balancing:

30 We reject the Government’s second contention that the First 31 Amendment is nugatory in a grand jury proceeding. No 32 governmental door can be closed against the Amendment. No 33 governmental activity is immune from its force. That the setting for

1 the competition between rights secured by the First Amendment and 2 antagonistic governmental interests is a grand jury proceeding is 3 simply one of the factors that must be taken into account in striking 4 the appropriate constitutional balance.

5 Id. at 1082.

6 On petition for rehearing in Burse, the government argued that Branzburg undermined the 7 rationale of the Court's decision. The Ninth Circuit rejected that broad reading of Branzburg:

8 "We have reexamined our analysis of the factors involved in balancing the First Amendment 9 rights against the governmental interests asserted to justify compelling answers to the questions 10 here involved, and we have concluded that the balance we struck is not impaired by Branzburg."

11 Id. at 1091.

12 The Ninth Circuit reaffirmed the qualified First Amendment newperson's privilege in 13 Shoen I, 5 F.3d 1289. In that case, the Ninth Circuit specifically stated "that the journalist's 14 privilege recognized in Branzburg was a 'partial First Amendment shield' that protects journalists 15 against compelled disclosure in all judicial proceedings, civil and criminal alike." Id. at 1292 16 (emphasis added) (quoting Farr v. Pitchess, 522 F.2d 464, 467 (9th Cir. 1975)); see also United 17 States v. Preizinger, 542 F.2d 517, 520-21 (9th Cir. 1976) (per curiam) (applying balancing test in 18 criminal case). In U.S. v. Cuthbertson, 630 F.3d 139, 147 (3rd Cir. 1980), the Third Circuit 19 reached the same conclusion:

20 [T]he interests of the press that form the foundation for the privilege 21 are not diminished because the underlying proceeding out of which 22 the request for the information arises is a criminal trial. CBS's 23 interest in protecting confidential sources, preventing intrusion into 24 the editorial process, and avoiding the possibility of self-censorship 25 by compelled disclosure of sources and unpublished notes does not 26 change because a case is civil or criminal.

27 The Ninth Circuit has, subsequent to Burse, found in a grand jury proceeding that the 28 government's interest in obtaining information from a scholar outweighed the interests of the 29 scholar (who the Court assumed arguendo was covered by the journalist's privilege) in refusing to 30 comply with the subpoena. In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 5 F.3d 397 (9th Cir. 1993) ("Scarce").
31 Yet Scarce did not repudiate the need for judicial balancing in cases such as the instant case, 32 where there have been credible questions raised about whether the federal investigation is 33 supported by legitimate federal law enforcement interests and whether the subpoena for the 1 unpublished videotapes has more than a tenuous connection to legitimate federal interests. Id. at 2 401.

3 B. The Ninth Circuit has Recognized that this Qualified First Amendment
4 Journalist's Privilege Applies to Unpublished Material.

5 The Ninth Circuit has also specifically recognized that the qualified First Amendment 6 privilege can extend not only to confidential sources, but also to unpublished material such as that 7 at issue in this case. The Ninth Circuit has held that "the journalist's privilege applies to a 8 journalist's resource materials even in the absence of the element of confidentiality." Shoen I, 5 9 F.3d at 1295. The court relied on supporting authority from the First, Second, and Third Circuits, 10 as well as scholarly commentary. Id. See La Rouche Campaign, 841 F.2d at 1182; von Bulow v.
11 von Bulow, 811 F.2d 136, 142 (2d Cir. 1987); Cuthbertson, 630 F.2d at 147; Duane D. Morse &
12 John W. Zucker, The Journalist's Privilege in Testimonial Privileges 474-75 (Scott N. Stone & 13 Ronald S. Liebman eds., 1983); see also infra Subsection II.C for discussion of importance of 14 privilege for both confidential and unpublished material.

15 The Shoen Court identified four key interests justifying a First Amendment newsperson's 16 privilege for unpublished material: "the threat of administrative and judicial intrusion into the 17 newsgathering and editorial process; the disadvantage of a journalist appearing to be an 18 investigative arm of the judicial system or a research tool of government or of a private party; the 19 disincentive to compile and preserve non-broadcast material; and the burden on journalists' time 20 and resources in responding to subpoenas." Shoen, 5 F.3d at 1294-95 (quoting La Rouche 21 Campaign, 841 F.2d at 1182.

22 In Cuthberston, the Third Circuit affirmed the journalist's qualified privilege to refuse to 23 disclose unpublished information, recognizing that the "compelled production for a reporters' 24 source materials can constitute a significant intrusion into the newsgathering and editorial 25 processes." Id. at 147. The court noted that the "public policy favoring the free flow of 26 information to the public that is the foundation for the privilege" would be "substantially 27 undercut" without protection for unpublished materials. Id.

II. IN BALANCING THE GOVERNMENTAL AND FIRST AMENDMENT INTERESTS IN THIS CASE, THE COURT MUST GIVE WEIGHT TO THE SERIOUS CLAIMS THAT HAVE BEEN RAISED ABOUT WHETHER THERE IS A LEGITIMATE FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT INTEREST IN MR. WOLF'S UNPUBLISHED VIDEOTAPE.

As discussed above, the First Amendment interests involved in judicially compelled disclosure of unpublished information require that the Court in this case weigh the legitimate federal law enforcement interests in compelling the disclosure of the unpublished videotapes against Mr. Wolf's and the public's interest in preserving the privilege against their disclosure. Such a balancing did not occur in the hearing before Magistrate James on the motion to quash (see p. 1, supra), and has not yet occurred in this case. There are a number of aspects of the government actions leading to the subpoena of Mr. Wolf that raise serious concerns that are directly relevant to this Court's determination as to the outcome of this balancing, and that weigh in favor of granting Mr. Wolf protection under the First Amendment.

A. The Circumvention By Federal and Local Law Enforcement Authorities of the Absolute Protection Mr. Wolf Would Enjoy Under the California Constitution Is a Factor That Should Be Weighed in the Balance.

The record in this case shows that the SFPD approached federal authorities for assistance a mere 3 days after the July 2005 incident. The SFPD was in the early stages of an investigation of a serious but certainly non-federal offense – a physical attack on a police officer – and there is no reason to believe that they lacked resources for this investigation or that they had exhausted all other investigative avenues. The request for federal assistance was followed within days with a visit to Mr. Wolf's home by local and federal agents operating as the Joint Terrorism Task Force, and seeking unpublished videotape footage that Mr. Wolf had shot while covering the public protest.

These undisputed facts lend credence to Mr. Wolf's claim that there is no legitimate federal law enforcement interest in this investigation, but that it is being pursued as a means of circumventing California's Shield Law. Cal. Const. Art. I, § 2(b). That constitutional provision would certainly have barred the local authorities from obtaining Mr. Wolf's videotapes. See Miller v. Superior Court, 21 Cal. 4th 883, 890-91 (1999) (applying absolute privilege to state criminal subpoena of unpublished materials). Importantly, California's Constitution expressly

1 protects “unpublished” information, including the kinds of outtakes sought by the grand jury’s
2 subpoena to Mr. Wolf.⁴ This kind of forum shopping may not in and of itself constitute a bad faith 3 investigation, but it is relevant to this Court, which must be convinced that the federal interest in 4 these unpublished materials bears more than a tenuous relationship to a legitimate federal 5 investigation. Scarce, 5 F.3d at 401. The possibility that the federal courts are being used as a 6 means of circumventing a state policy adopted by Californians and enshrined in the State 7 Constitution should be of concern to this Court.

8 B. The Federal Enforcement Authorities’ Apparent Failure to Show that they 9 Have Adhered to Department of Justice Guidelines in Issuing a Subpoena to 10 Mr. Wolf Is Another Relevant Factor.

11 To give appropriate weight to the First Amendment interests, the courts have held that an 12 important factor in balancing the respective interests is that the government demonstrate that it has 13 exhausted all reasonably available alternatives. Shoen v. Shoen, 48 F.3d 412, 416 (9th Cir. 1995)
14 (Shoen II). This factor is in fact echoed and amplified in the Department of Justice’s own 15 guidelines, which apply to criminal cases and federal grand jury subpoenas. 28 C.F.R. § 50.10.
16 The Department of Justice, recognizing the importance of not unnecessarily interfering with the 17 newsgathering process, has laid down clear guidelines for subpoenaing newsmen. These 18 require federal authorities, before subpoenaing a journalist, to make reasonable efforts to acquire 19 information possessed by the newsmen from other sources, demonstrate that the sought after 20 information is more than peripherally related to a criminal investigation, and engage in negotiation 21 with the journalist.

22 _____
23 ⁴ As defined in Article I, Section (2)(b), “unpublished information” includes information not 24 disseminated to the public by the person from whom disclosure is sought, whether or not related 25 information has been disseminated and includes, but is not limited to, all notes, outtakes, 26 photographs, tapes or other data of whatever sort not itself disseminated to the public through a 27 medium of communication, whether or not published information based upon or related to such 28 material has been disseminated.” (Emphasis added.) Although the California Shield Law originally protected only against disclosure of confidential sources, when California voters overwhelmingly approved the amendment to the law in 1990 including protection for “unpublished information” whether given in confidence or not, the Shield Law was elevated to constitutional status. The amendment was specifically to rectify the trend of the California courts to create certain exceptions and limitations to the statutory privilege under California Evidence Code Section 1070. Playboy Enterprises, Inc. v. Superior Court, 154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 27 (1984).

1 Thus, even if the authorization of the United States Attorney General has been obtained, as 2 the government now asserts, the facts before this Court do not show that the need and exhaustion 3 requirements of the guidelines have been met. Rather, the record shows that the FBI received a 4 request for assistance three days after the underlying incident, and that the first federal 5 involvement in this matter was a JTTF visit to Mr. Wolf's home, where a demand was made to 6 view the unpublished materials. Whether the federal prosecutors conducted themselves according 7 to their own internal guidelines should be taken into account by this Court, which should 8 independently be satisfied that no reasonable alternatives exist. See Shoen II, 48 F.3d at 416.⁵

9 C. Mr. Wolf's Ability to Function as a Journalist Is Threatened by this 10 Subpoena; Jailing Mr. Wolf Will Chill Others Engaged in Constitutionally 11 Protected Activities.

12 The concerns that motivated the vast majority of states and federal circuits to recognize a 13 journalist's privilege are at their nexus here. In fact, a number of the concerns that the Shoen 14 Court recognized as underlying the privilege are very much at risk in this case, especially the 15 adverse effect on the newsgathering function when a journalist "appear[s] to be an investigative 16 arm of the judicial system or the research tool of government" 5 F.3d at 1294-95. As 17 examples of the "harms" the could flow from compelled disclosure, the Shoen Court explicitly 18 noted adverse consequences to the newsgathering function that in fact have been raised in this case 19 by Mr. Wolf:

20 It is their independent status that often enables reporters to gain 21 access, without a pledge of confidentiality, to meetings or places 22 where a policeman or politician wouldn't be welcome. If perceived 23 as an adjunct of the police or the courts, journalists might well be 24 shunned by persons who might otherwise give them information 25 without a promise of confidentiality, barred from meetings which 26 they should otherwise be free to attend and to describe, or even 27 physically harassed if, for example, observed taking notes or 28 photographs at a public rally.

Id. at 1295 (quoting Morse and Zucker, supra, at 474-75) (emphasis added).

⁵ In fact, the Supreme Court in Branzburg noted that the existence of guidelines laid down by the Attorney General were significant and a "major step" in assuring protection for the press from the dangers inherent in compelled testimony in grand jury settings. 408 U.S. at 706-07.

1 The federal government’s subpoena has already caused the “harms” noted by the Ninth 2 Circuit in Shoen I. It has interfered with Mr. Wolf’s relationship with anarchist and anti-war 3 groups that he covers as a freelance journalist. It has limited his access to protestors and his 4 ability to cover demonstrations. (See Declaration of Joshua Wolf in Support of Subpoenaed Party 5 Motion for De Novo Determination.) Mr. Wolf has refused to comply with this subpoena because 6 he believes that if he is viewed by these groups as cooperating with the government, he will no 7 longer be able to perform his vital role of covering these groups. If Mr. Wolf is imprisoned for 8 protecting his unpublished information in this federal case, the message will be sent to others who 9 similarly provide the public with information about the activities of those engaged in protest and 10 dissent that their constitutionally-protected activities are in jeopardy.

11 Mr. Wolf’s concerns about his ability to continue to report on the protests and activities of 12 social activists warrant this Court’s careful consideration, particularly in light of serious questions 13 that have been raised about the legitimacy of the federal law enforcement interests asserted here.
14 The government should not be permitted to usurp a journalist’s unpublished information – and 15 curtail the public’s ability to learn information about these groups’ activities – without a strong 16 showing that its interests outweigh the significant First Amendment interests that are at stake.
17 Here, the constitutional issues go well beyond Mr. Wolf’s activities. Imprisoning Mr. Wolf based 18 on his protection of unpublished information – information that would be absolutely protected if 19 these issues had arisen in state court – will inevitably diminish the protection afforded to all 20 journalists who provide information that the public is wholly dependent upon.

21 III. CONCLUSION

22 It is beyond dispute that important First Amendment interests are at risk by Mr. Wolf’s 23 threatened imprisonment, and that factors that are before this Court weigh against rejection of his 24 claim of privilege. Only this Court’s adherence to a balancing of interests consistent with the First 25 Amendment will maintain and vindicate the constitutional protections for a free press, particularly
